

Of all questions I had to tackle during 2016, technical issues were by far the easiest. In recent months, I have become concerned that the western world is taking the wrong spin. What will it take for our society, the one that enjoys the most enviable living conditions, to regain faith in the future?

I brought these colorful pictures back from a cycling trip in beautiful Ha Giang, the most northern province of Vietnam. The livelihood of this country at peace with its tormented past and resolutely moving forward was inspiring.

I hope that in 2017 reason will prevail over demagogy, and that our society will produce the necessary adjustments to reunite around humanist and liberal values.
